Dear Colleagues

All who we are working in institutions using primates in research need a good knowledge of their biology, as part of the strong responsibility for the welfare of our protégés. Within EUPRIM-Net we offer a course series about Primatology to impart a broad knowledge about different aspects of primate biology.

Today we would like to invite you to the next two courses which will be held at the German Primate Center (DPZ) in Göttingen, Germany.

We hope to meet your interests and would be glad to see you here in Göttingen!

With best regards

Eckhard W. Heymann

“Primate Social Systems, Reproduction, and Breeding”

October 24 – 26, 2007

For the discussion of primate keeping and breeding in captivity the mating systems of different primates are one of the key issues. This discussion has to be conducted in context of the respective social systems of the primate species. We start this course module with these two ethological aspects. Sessions about the morphological and physiological aspects of reproduction, which is important for the understanding of laboratory primate breeding, complement the course schedule. The last day of the course is dedicated to concrete topics of ontogenesis, breeding and genetic population management.

The course will give the possibility to discuss these issues in an auditorium of experienced colleagues.

“Primate Behaviour, Environmental Enrichment, and Ethical Aspects”

October 29 – November 1, 2007

Primate behaviour and environmental enrichment is a main topic for the welfare of captive primates. The general and social behaviour of primates will be highlighted in the first part of this course, followed by sessions on the behavioural needs of the different primate species. These are important for their psychological and physical well-being. Another session is dedicated to environmental enrichment which is essential for the quality of life of kept primates.

Our strong responsibility for the welfare of captive primates requires that ethical guidelines and corresponding legislation is observed. We have included these two topics to meet the current and forthcoming trends, and also to provide a forum for discussion of this issue. Aspects of primate communication are addressed in the final course section.

Information

Certificate

At the end of each course we provide an optional examination with questions on the respective course contents to certify your successful participation.

Tourist Information

Those of you who stay the weekend in Göttingen between the two courses should be aware that Göttingen has a rich cultural life with theatres, orchestras, museums and events. Also, the surrounding area is very beautiful and offers many possibilities for short trips.

Further information can be found at <http://www.goettingen-tourismus.de/>

Outlook

The other courses are:

26-30/11/2007	Primate diseases and health problems
14-18/01/2008	Environmental enrichment, handling; non-invasive methods; ethical and legal aspects of primate research
Feb./March 2008	Primate nutrition

For more information about the course series please have a look at

<http://www.euprim-net.eu/network/courses.htm>

Abstracts of each course part with a more detailed content description will be posted from the end of August 2007. We will keep you up to date.

Travel and Accommodation

Participants are responsible for organizing travel and accommodation and for paying their expenses. We provide a selection of hotels which we can send you on request. For more information about the town of Göttingen, please refer to <http://www.goettingen-tourismus.de/>.
